BASMATI RICE

Basmati is an Extra-long grain Rice is grown in the foothills of the Himalayas, this aromatic rice was once known as the food of the emperors. Basmati rice has been reported in India since the early days of the 19th Century though it may have been named differently. 'Bas' in Sanskrit language means "aroma" and 'Mati' means "full of" hence the word Basmati i.e. full of aroma. At RiceOne, we age the Basmati from a minimum of one to two years, to enhance and intensify its taste, aroma and cooking characteristics. Each grain of matured old basmati rice on cooking, separates out and gives its unique characteristics of aroma and elongation on post cooking.

SEERAGA SAMBA RICE

Short Grain Rice (super aroma)

Seeraga Samba is a variety of rice grown in Tamil Nadu, some other southern parts of India, and has a small ovular grain, compared to the long grain of basmati rice. Samba rice has a distinct taste and can be described as having a more 'starchy' or 'corny' flavour, and thus is an acquired taste preferred mainly by the locals. The grain itself is much harder than the other varieties and when cooked is less 'fluffy' in texture so gives a more filling meal with a higher caloric value. All Samba rice grain is harvested locally and there are many sub-varieties ranging in grain size and price. Seeraga Samba is the most expensive sub-variety and has the smallest grain. It is approximately a third the size of a grain of basmati rice.

BROWN RICE

Brown rice or "hulled" or "un-milled" rice is whole grain rice. It has a mild, nutty flavour, and is chewier and more nutritious than white rice. It is very delicious and considered to be good for health. Brown rice is produced when only the outermost layer of a grain of rice the husk is removed. The side hulls and brans provide “natural wholeness” to the grain and are rich in proteins, thiamine, calcium, magnesium, fibre, and potassium. For those trying to lose weight or those suffering from diabetes, brown rice can prove a healthful staple given its low glycaemic rating which helps reduce insulin spikes, cancer, diabetes and many more diseases.
